

10
~~11~~

ABSTRACT

5 A detector is provided for a device for measuring radioactive areas, in which the device has two electrodes, between which a voltage is applied, and which also has a counter gas. In such device, the electrodes are arranged on opposite surfaces of a support. Channels are provided which pierce the electrodes and the support. In this manner, the counter gas is in contact with the electrodes via the channels.